WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

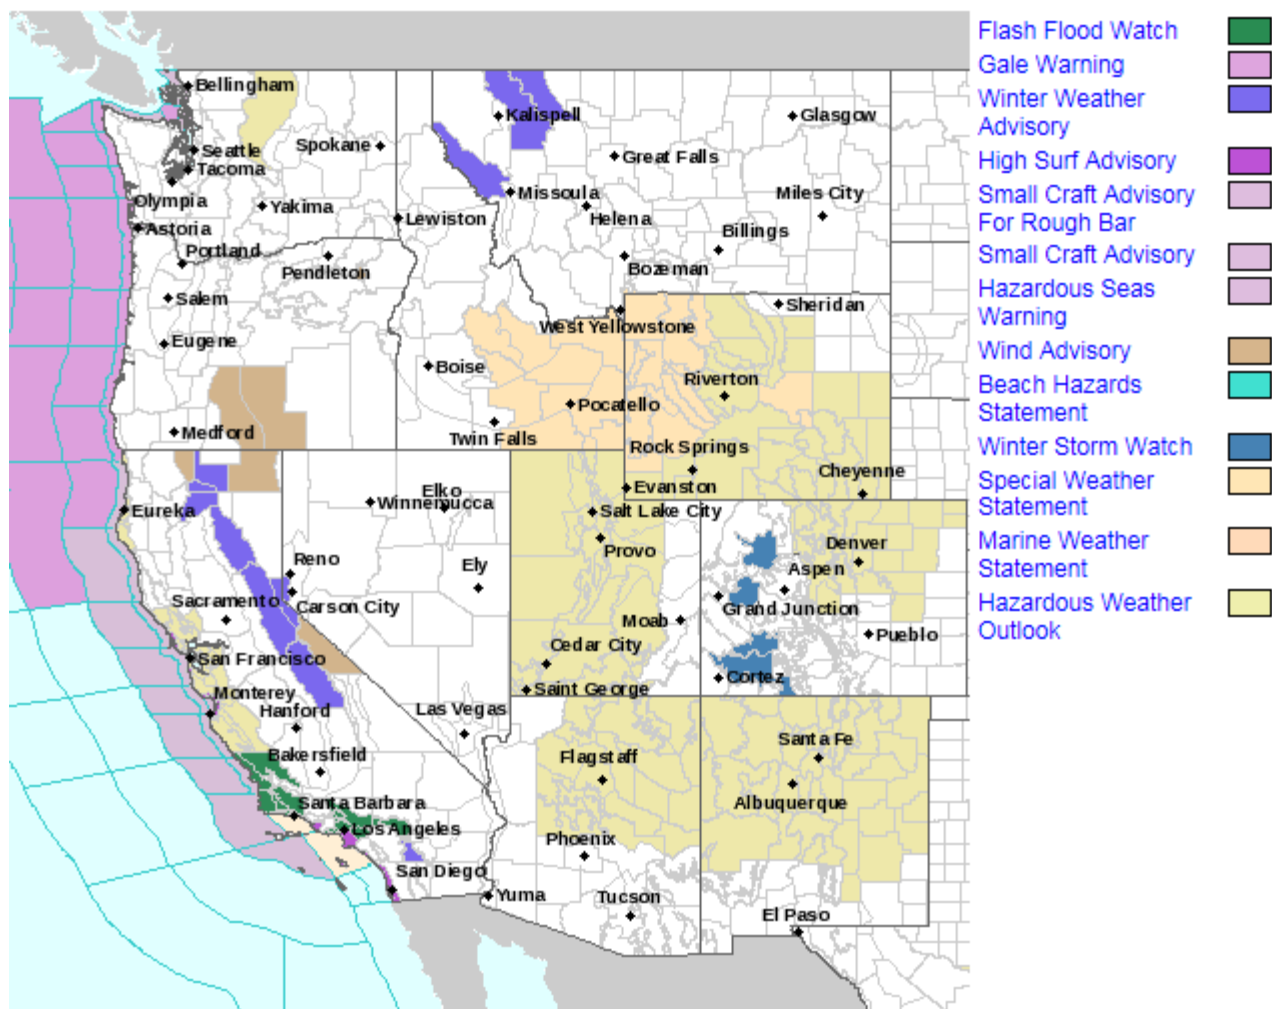

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A winter storm will move through northern California today through Sunday. This weather system will bring rain, mountain snow, and breezy to gusty winds. Light to occasionally moderate rain will continue through tomorrow afternoon. Isolated thunderstorms may develop Sunday afternoon, mainly for locations along and south of highway 36, with precipitation decreasing in coverage during the evening through early Monday afternoon time frame. A brief dry period is still anticipated for Monday evening through early Tuesday morning, before another weather system brings more widespread rainfall by late morning, persisting through the end of the week. Snow levels will also decrease during the middle of next week. Rain and mountain snow this weekend and early next week. A brief break Tuesday then another round of precipitation possible just prior to and including the Thanksgiving Day holiday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Gusty Santa Ana winds will affect portions of Los Angeles and Ventura Counties through Saturday afternoon. The offshore winds will cause widespread drying, especially over Los Angeles and Ventura counties where a Red Flag Warning is in effect for critical fire weather conditions. A storm system will bring rain to the region late Saturday night through early Monday, along with a slight chance of thunderstorms and high elevation snow. Temperatures will be near normal much of next week. Thanksgiving day will likely be the warmest day as northerly offshore flow develops following the passage of a moisture starved trough.
